The denarius was to become the major silver coin of the Roman Empire for the next 400 years. Significant is that the denarius was related to Rome's long-established bronze coin system: the X on the left of Roma's head on the obverse indicates "10 asses.". The Latin term "denarius" literally means "tenner.".

Coins issued by Greek cities (Roman Provincial coins) often showed a local monument. In some cases the coins provide major, or the sole, evidence for the appearance of a building. Despite the small scale, important details are often given, such as Ionic column capitals, Corinthian capitals, and pedimental sculpture.
