Roscoe's speech is important to historians of Liverpool abolitionism because he contended that a "great and respectable body of the inhabitants of Liverpool" expected his abolitionist vote.

The Slaving Capital in the Era of Abolition: Liverpool

Another of his close associates was Thomas Traill (1781–1862), editor of the eighth edition of the Encyclopaedia Britannica, who also played an important role in establishing the Athenaeum Club and the Liverpool Royal Institution. Although this essay focuses on Roscoe's most celebrated and, at times, seemingly preeminent role in Liverpool's cultural activities, the influence of this grouping of liberal and like-minded intellectuals should not be underestimated.
