the body. The decisive advance of the systems view of life has been to abandon the Cartesian view of mind as a thing, and to realize that mind is not a thing but a process. This novel concept of mind was developed during the 1960s by Gregory Bateson, and independently by Humberto Maturana, and then by Maturana and Francisco Varela.

A systems view often makes the planning process much more clear and orderly to planners. An advantage for designers who have a systems view is that they have stronger knowledge of the primary parts of their project, product or service and how they should be aligned to more effectively reach desired goals.

Benefits of Open Systems View of Organizations

In this chapter we aim to provide an insight into the process of management in the context of both people and organizational structure, concentrating on various systemic viewpoints that have emerged. Initially, the focus is upon the general contribution of systems thinking to the evolution of management theory.
